2008 September Outing in the Dax

Fern Lake

Black Brook, New York

Hey..its just Fern baby..

AuSable River

- Nestled in New York's pristine Adirondack Mountains lies the AuSable River, acclaimed by many as the premier trout stream in the East.
- This river is actually divided into three sections; the East Branch, West Branch and the main river where the two branches join forces.
- But it's the West Branch that has gained world recognition as the best trout stream in New York state.
- It's clean mineral rich waters formed by the numerous spring feeders coming from the high peaks of the region, supply abundant cold water to keep the river temperatures trout adaptable throughout the summer months.
- The gradient (the river drops in elevation nearly 4,000 feet over a forty mile distance), along with many water falls and deep holding pools, provide plenty of places for the fish to take refuge during the winter months and hot periods of summer.
- A heavy canopy bordering most of the stream provides shelter from the sun and a breeding ground for many insects. Add to these prerequisites for an idyllic trout stream a bed of rich soil, uncountable boulders to provide aeration and you do indeed have all the necessary ingredients for the ideal fly fishing paradise.
